THE TIDES REPRODUCTIVE JUSTICE FUND

Protecting and advancing the rights of women and girls is central to democracy.

In order to achieve social and economic justice, women and girls need quality, affordable health care; the right to bear and parent children; access to safe and legal abortions; a commitment to end domestic violence; and the removal of environmental health threats.

The Tides Reproductive Justice Fund addresses these issues head-on. Since 2003, the Fund has granted over $2.7 million to 45 organizations. In 2006, the Reproductive Justice Fund made a total of $801,985 in grants to 24 reproductive justice organizations in 12 states and the District of Columbia.

We are bringing together a wide spectrum of women to build a grassroots movement that resonates with the public and has the power to win real victories at the local, state, and federal levels. The Fund helps build this practical strength by supporting efforts to engage underrepresented women — specifically including women of color, low-income, young, rural, immigrant, LGBT, and incarcerated women.

Underlying this work is the fact that women's rights need to become a more integral part of the progressive movement. By funding organizations that are actively building bridges between reproductive justice and other social justice work — the reproductive health impact of environmental pollution, for example — the Reproductive Justice Fund is working to pull women's issues out from the margins and into the center of national politics.
